RESENTED BEING COOK FOR WIFE'S AFFINITY

John Florey Said he Had to Start Fire and Get Breakfast.

ERRING ONES IN JAIL

Mrs. Florey and Noah Weaver, Who was Star Boarder, Committed by Squire Musser to Await Trial in Court—Lively Time at Hearing.

That a man should have his wife's affections stolen is bad enough, but when he is compelled to get up in the morning, make the fire and cook breakfast for his wife and her affinity, it's going a little too far.

This, at least, is the reasoning of John Florey, of Vernona Hill, who is employed at the Nittany furnace, and who last week had a warrant issued for the arrest of his wife and Noah Weaver, charging them with a serious offense. Following a rather lively hearing on Saturday evening before Squire Musser, Mrs. Florey and Weaver were committed to jail pending trial in court.

Mrs. Florey is about 26 or 27 years old and fairly good looking. Her husband is probably 60 years, while Weaver is about 40 years old.

Weaver was a boarder at the Florey home, but just where he slept at night is a mystery, since at the hearing before Squire Musser it was testified that there was but one bed in the house. Some time ago Mrs. Florey and Weaver, so it was testified, went away. This tried the patience of Mr. Florey beyond the breaking point and he made a flying visit to the office of District Attorney Runkle. The latter at once took action, with the result that Mrs. Florey and Weaver were arrested. To the surprise of her husband's friends, Mrs. Florey and Weaver insisted on having a hearing. Their wish was granted but the result was far from their expectations.

Squire Musser is not a man of the world; in fact, he doesn't profess to be. He does, however, resent the notion on the part of a witness before him that he doesn't have his ideas as to the ways of the world. Fooling Squire Musser, who is in the seventies, isn't half so easy as it might look to be. As witness the experience of Weaver, when he was placed on the stand.

Weaver admitted that he had been away with Mrs. Florey, and that they had never considered it necessary, or at least had been unable, to secure more than one room at points where they had visited over night. To this Weaver added, and with much emphasis, that their relationship had been entirely honorable.

"And would you swear to that?" queried Squire Musser, his manner no longer than that of a kindly old father.

"Yes, I would", quickly replied Weaver.

"Well, I don't believe you" retorted Squire Musser. "You can't tell me that; I'm too old to give me that kind of a story."

Thus bowled over, Weaver left the witness stand.

Mrs. Florey was next called. She was indignant, and what's more, wanted it known that she was angry. Her anger was aimed at her husband. She also wanted that understood.

"I won't go back to him, no I won't," she explained in a burst of indignation.

"No, not for some time, anyway", dryly remarked Squire Musser.

"Well, I won't that's all; why, he threatened to shoot me", she rejoined, her anger showing no indication of cooling off.

"Well, you and the other fellow ought to be shot with a rail", blurted out Squire Musser, by this time somewhat indigant himself.

This ended Mrs. Florey's testimony, and her husband took the stand. He described how Weaver had come to board at the house and how eventually he (Florey) was picked out each morning as the one to get up first, go down and light the fire and get the breakfast. The anxiety to have him get down stairs first, Florey testified, aroused his suspicions that perhaps things upstairs were not as they should be. He testified that he investigated further and that the result of his investigation was his visit to the office of District Attorney Runkle.

"Committed for court", said Squire Musser, bringing the hearing to a close. Mrs. Florey, still indignant, and Weaver, still maintaining his innocence, started out, escorted by Sheriff Hurley. Unable to secure bail, they were returned to the jail.

CARPENTERS BANQUET

Eighth Annual Dinner Given by Bellefonte Union, No. 1190.

Bellefonte lodge, No. 1190, Carpenters and Joiners of America, held their eighth annual banquet on Tuesday evening, at Garbrick's cafe, and it was a pleasing success. Twenty-one members of the union were in attendance. Preceding the meeting, the several members assembled at the headquarters, at the Undine Hose House, and marched in a body to the cafe. There, shortly after 9 o'clock, they sat down to a roast chicken dinner.

When the dishes had been cleared away, Patrick H. Gherrity was chosen toastmaster, and in taking the gavel he talked in an interesting manner on the general benefit to labor resulting from intelligent organization and co-operation. As a result of the organization of the carpenters union, he added, all trade conditions in Bellefonte had been improved. He concluded with a prediction for many more years of success.

James Rine, secretary of the union, was then introduced and responded in his usually interesting way. He, too, predicted greater success for the union in the future. The need of working men standing together was the keynote of a short talk by Jacob P. Smith. Harry Eberhart, who was the first president of the union, and instrumental in its organization nine years ago, was the next speaker. He narrated the early history of the union, said that by standing together the wages of carpenters had been increased from $1.75 to $2.47 per day, and in conclusion emphasized the importance of conservatism and of fair treatment for all. The closing talk was by the editor of "The Republican." Several of the best looking men present were too bashful to respond to toasts. Contractor Edward J. Gehret, who was awarded the prize for being the handsomest man at the tables, declined to speak, and when his partner, John Lambert, was called on, he laughingly replied that everything he had intended saying had been said by Gehret. Herb Miller said that when he entered the dining room he was a carpenter, but that during the evening he had been joining so much food that he had quit the carpenters and had become a full fledged member of the Joiners.

The sentiment of the evening was voiced, and the function brought to a close, with this happy response by Daniel Eberhart, when called on for a speech: "May you all live long and prosper and enjoy the benefits of Local Union 1190."

BOALSBURG COMMENCEMENT

Interesting Excersies Held by Graduates of High School.

Interesting commencement excercises were held on Tuesday evening by the Boalsburg High School graduating class, at Boalsburg. Boal's Hall was well filled with the parents and friends of the graduates and a well prepared program was rendered. Music was furnished by Smith's ochestra.

Rev. W. K. Harnish opened the exercises with prayer, after which Miss Irene Lenore Ross deliverd the salutatory her subject being, "On the Threshold." "The White Plague" was the subject of an oration by John William Weber, while Albert Henry Meyer had as his subject, "William Jennings Bryan the Cosmopolitan Citizen." John Harrison Kline's subject was "Rich Men and their Money," while that of Paul Clarence Rupp was, "Arbitration in the Settlement of Disputes." Nil desperandum," the class motto, was the subject of the class oration, by John Guy Weiland. Wilfred Nedson Keller's oration was entitled, "Roosevelt, the Statesman," and then Miss Marjorie Rothrock delivered the valedictory, her subject being "Ideals." With the presentation of the diaplomas the exercises were brought to a close.

Orchard Inspections.

Orchard inspection meetings were held on Monday, at the orchard of Newton Neidigh, near State College and yesterday at the orchard of J. J. Arney, near Centre Hall. Both meetings were well attended. The inspections were conducted by representatives of the Division of Zoology, State Department of Agriculture, at Harrisburg. Tomorrow (Friday) afternoon an inspection meeting will be held at the orchard of Colouel W. Fred Reynolds, near Bellefonte.

Philipsburg Garment Factory.

H. W. Sallada, proprietor of the Netherland Shirt Factory, of Philipsburg, has sold that plant to R. L. Spaide, of Hazleton, and R. B. Stauffer, of DuBois. The new proprietors will take charge on April 15. Mr. Sallada, will remain with the firm and will devote his attention to the cutting department. That branch of the work has heretofore been done in Philadelphia.

CANNING FACTORY AT HOWARD BURNED OUT

Incendiary Believed to Have Caused $15,000 Blaze.

WATER PIPE WAS CUT

Plant was Built Six Years Ago and Operated on Co-operative Plan—Had Not Been Profitable Investment—Not Likely to be Rebuilt.

The most disastrous fire that has visited Howard since the burning of the rolling mill and forge some years ago, occurred early Wednesday morning when the plant of the Howard Canning Company was burned to the ground. The fire started about half-past two o'clock and was doubtless of incendiary origin, as there had been no fires about the buildings since cold weather. The buildings were just out of reach of the protection of the borough water works, but a small line runs to the plant from the eastern end of town. To make sure of his work the incendiary had cut off this line and no water was available to extinguish the flames when the discovery was made.

The plant was built six years ago at an initial cost of $12,500 and additional repairs and improvements had since been made. There was very little stock on hand at this time, but about $1,000 worth of empty cans were stored in the buildings. The loss will amount to about $15,000, with only $6,000 insurance. The stockholders were principally farmers and residents of that vicinity and the loss will be keenly felt by many of them. The plant was operated on the co-operative plan, and since it was built had not yielded very large dividends.

Very little was saved and the heat from the flames was so intense that the entire lines of the American Telegraph and Telephone company were burned off.

A meeting was to have been called soon to consider plans for the operation of the plant during the coming season and an effort made to clear it from indebtedness. It is not probable that the plant will be rebuilt.

STILL AFTER DR. KIRK

Council Colleagues Force Him to Abandon Water Meter.

"Who threw that last brick at Dr. Kirk?" is becoming the official slogan of Bellefonte Council. His colleagues, at the meeting held on Monday night, last, "handed" the fighting Doctor another one. This time it was a resolution, which was adopted, compelling him to abandon a water meter in use at his home. The resolution prohibits the use of water meters in private residences. Dr. Kirk and one or two others have such meters in their homes. The "others", if any such actually exist, were not aimed at in the resolution. With kindly consideration for Dr. Kirk's feelings, the resolution was introduced and passed while he was present at the meeting.

Dr. Kirk introduced a resolution, which was approved, directing that about $16,000 in the sinking fund be applied to the borough debt.

Far be it from the policy of "The Republican" to rush in where Angels fear to tread, but we suggest the introduction of an ordinance at the next meeting of Council providing for the purchase of a pair of boxing gloves for the exclusive use of Dr. Kirk and President Harper.

B. C. R. R. Special Trains.

The Bellefonte Central Railroad will run special trains to State College on Saturday, April 9, for the entertainment of The Ben Greet Players. One train will leave Bellefonte at 1.30 P. M. and the other at 7 P. M. A special return train will leave State College after the evening entertainment.

On account of the baseball game at State College tomorrow (Friday) afternoon, between the State College varsity team and the Academy nines, the Bellefonte Central will hold the regular evening train for Bellefonte until after the game.

No Longer a Candidate.

Lawyer W. Harrison Walker this week publicly announced that he is no longer a candidate for the Democratic nomination for Congress in the Twenty-first district. Mr. Walker had planned waging an active canvass for the nomination, but on second thought concluded that a bird in the hand is worth two thousand in the bush and decided that he would continue practicing law.

FRESHMAN BANQUETS VETOED

Time-Honored Function Must Hereafter be Held at State College.

The time-honored out-of-town banquet of the Freshman class of State College has been placed under the ban. As an echo of the recent banquet held at Williamsport, where the Freshmen cut up some high jinks that made the natives of the Lumber City blink in amazement, it has been decided that all future functions of the fourth-year men shall be held at State College. The students are disposed to look upon the order as lowering, or elevating, the high spot of the year to the grade of a pink tea, but there is no help for it and hereafter the banquet must be held at State College or not at all.

The executive committee of the board of trustees of the Pennsylvania State College have made the following additions to the faculty: Joseph L. Appleton of Hamilton College, Guy Chiesman of Lake Forest University and Francis B. Kingsburg of Harvard University, to be instructors in chemistry; Miss Amy I. Peet of Fergus Falls, Minn., to be instructor in domestic science, and Milton W. Eddy of Northwestern University to be instructor in entomology.

Professors Stewart, Noll and Myers were given a year's leave of absence for study.

Application was made to the Prussian Government for an interchange of teachers in German and English.

The construction of a new grandstand on the athletic field to cost $5,500 was authorized.

Spent Night in Woods.

Samuel Mitchell, one of Philipsburg's veterans, had an unpleasant experience a few nights ago. Accompanied by his six-year-old granddaughter, Mildred Lupton, he started for the woods to pick wild flowers. They lost their way and when night came were still in the woods. Finding a large log, which they used as shelter, they slept all night on the ground. When Mr. Mitchell, who is 75 years old, and the little girl failed to return home in the evening, a crowd of friends started out to find them. They spent the entire night searching the woods, but failed to come across the missing ones. Beyond being thoroughly chilled neither Mr. Mitchell nor the little girl seemed to be any worse off for their rather unpleasant experience.

Horticultural Meeting Called Off.

The proposed meeting of the Centre County Horticultural Society, at State College on Friday, April 8, has been called off. Formal announcement to this effect was made by Cyrus Brungart, president of the association. Owing to the holding of demonstration orchard meetings in Centre county this week, it was feared that the proposed meeting at State College would conflict.

Brick Plant Doubles Capacity.

The Bickford Fire Brick Company has decided to double the capacity of its large plant at Curwensville. Quite a number of Bellefonte business men are stockholders in the company. The decision to increase the capacity of the plant was hastened by the receipt of a very large order from the United States Steel Corporation.

FIRST YEAR OF TAFT

How An Agricultural Paper Analyzes Situation.

The "American Agriculturalist," in its issue for March, publishes the following in discussing President Taft's first year in the White House:

This month marks the end of the first and beginning of the second year of President Taft's administration. Naturally, the pecple are figuring out results, and interesting comments are being made on this first year. It has been no easy task to follow a president of such tremendous energy and great personal popularity as President Roosevelt. Neither is it possible for any president to please everybody. A wise and honest man never tries to do the latter.

The chances are that if you stop the first man you meet and ask him what he thinks of President Taft's administration, he will tell you that he does not think it has "made good." The one big thing done during the past year was the enactment of the Payne tariff law. That law does not satisfy the majority of the people and, however unjust the criticism may be, President Taft is held to be partly to blame for it.

The friends of the President say that he did all that it was wise or proper for him to do to induce congress to revise the tariff downward. His critics say that he ought to have taken an aggressive part with congress when it became apparent what sort of a bill Aldrich and the other stand-patters proposed to put through and ought not to have waited until the bill had reached the conference committee before asserting himself.

We have to remember that Mr. Roosevelt was in a continual quarrel with congress and that many of the things he wanted he could not get, chiefly because the feeling was so bitter over harsh things said and done by Mr. Roosevelt. President Taft believes in tactful persuasion rather than too free use of a club as a means of accomplishing things.

One of his first undertakings was to secure the good will of congress and to pour oil upon the troubled waters left in the wake of his predecessor. Pursuance of this policy with reference to various persons and interests with whom he has had to deal has brought upon President Taft the criticism that he was at heart opposed to the Roosevelt policies and was bent on making friends with and serving the trusts, the "malefactors of great wealth" and the other enemies of the common weal against whom President Roosevelt waged uncompromising warfare.

The President's defence of the Payne tariff the past fall and winter has not made it fit.

President Taft has been unfortunate in his cabinet. Somehow or other the impression has gone out that his cabinet is made up of men opposed to Roosevelt policies. The secretary of state has fallen short of measuring up to the standards set by John Hay and Elihu Root. He has made some blunders and has not gotten on as well with many of the nations with whom we have important diplomatic relations, Japan and the central American countries, for instance, as did his distinguished predecessor, Mr. Root.

The postmaster-general has done little for which he is given credit in the post-office department. As a matter of fact, better business methods have been introduced which deserve notice. In the roll of political boss the postmaster-general has brought the administration into disfavor through what looks like the use of federal patronage for political purposes.

The land scandals in which the secretary of the interior has become involved have greatly embarrassed the administration and many feel that it reflects seriously upon the good judgment of the President, not only in retaining him as long as he has, but in selecting Ballinger at all. Not to mention specifically any of the other heads of departments in the official family of the President, it is generally felt that the cabinet is a weak one. But a year or two later the record of the administration may abundantly vindicate the judgment of the president in the selection of his cabinet as well as in his methods of dealing with public questions. We hope so.

It is fair to take the position that President Taft is sincere when he says that he stands squarely for the policies put forward by Mr. Roosevelt and for a further broadening of those policies in behalf of conserving natural resources and exercising federal control over corporations doing an interstate business. It is fair to give him the benefit of the doubt with reference to methods, assuming that the Taft smile may ultimately accomplish reforms as well as the Roosevelt big stick.

It is amusing to note that many who profess to favor real reform in public affairs were indignant over the harsh methods pursued by Mr. Roosevelt, and now, when Mr. Taft pursues milder methods with a view to accomplishing the same ends, they are quite as indignant because he does not cut and slash after the Roosevelt fashion. All of which goes to prove you can't please some people whatever you do.

The President is confronted with a serious problem in dealing with the two factions of the republican party. The so-called regulars are in the saddle and in the majority in congress. As leader of the party, the President would have no end of trouble if he boldly took up the cause of the insurgent minority. He has committed himself to some of the most important reforms sought by the insurgents, but he avoids giving them much comfort, and causes them great distress by taking counsel with Aldrich and getting up a White House dinner for Speaker Cannon.

Mr. Taft may get what he wants and what the people want before his term has ended. It is certainly too early now to censure him very severely. For one must remember that to do is not so easy as to know what is good to do.

A newspaper man professes to have interviewed the President on March 4, and says that Mr. Taft told him that, looking back upon his first year, he felt much as did a certain colored preacher once. The preacher called for the collection in church one morning and furnished his own hat for the purpose of having it taken up. The hat was passed around and returned as empty as when it started. The preacher's comment was: "Well, bred'ren, I'se t'ankful I got de hat back."

Cleaning With Gasolene.

"Chiffon ruchings, which are soiled, but not crushed," says Florence M. Myers in WOMAM'S HOME COMPANION for April, "can be rejuvenated by shaking them in clear gasolene, and then drying them in the sunshine and air. Small articles, such as fancy neckwear in general, which must be treated gently can be put into a fruit-jar nearly filled with gasolene. Using a rubber ring, screw the top on tightly. Let the articles soak for some time, and then shake them vigorously. Rinse in the same manner in clear gasolene.

"Coat-collars can often be cleaned by wetting a cloth in gasolene and then rubbing the soiled part. Occasionally, if the fabric will warrant it and is very much soiled, I have used an old toothbrush for this purpose, instead of the cloth. Neckties cannot always be cleaned by the simple rubbing process. If that is so, try using a brush dipped in gasolene, to scrub the very soiled parts. Satin, of course, does not permit of this treatment. Grease spots can be removed by rubbing the spot with a good white soap after the article has been soaked in gasolene. Rub hard and rinse thoroughly. Gasolene in which soap has been used cannot be used a second time. White kid gloves, as everyone knows, can be successfully cleaned in gasolene, and almost everyone has her own special method. Colored gloves do not clean well, as a rule. It is best not to try them.

"Do not buy a quantity of gasolene and store it to use from time to time. Many fire-insurance companies will not [illegible] pay them if this is done."

Don't let the baby suffer from eczema, sores or any itching of the skin. Doan's Ointment gives instant relief. cures quickly. Perfectly safe for children. All druggists sell it.

EXPECT BIG WHEAT CROP

Pennsylvania Farmers Planted Approximately 1,600,000 Acres.

"Pennsylvania farmers sowed probably 100,000 acres more than usual in wheat last year and the Winter was distinctly favorable for the crop," said Deputy Secretary of Agriculture A. L. Martin, at arrisburg, after a study of State crop reports.

"The reports I have at hand come from every county in the State and indicate that the wheat crop should be excellent. The Winter was one of the most favorable in twenty years for the preservation of wheat, as the snows were deep and prolonged. Even this month, which is generally the most disastrous of the whole year for wheat, has been ideal. I think it is the most favorable March for wheat I have ever known There was plenty of snow early in the month and we have been fortunate in not experiencing alternate periods of thaw and freeze which tend to pull up the grain and break the top roots.

"The reason why more wheat was sowed last year was largely due to the dry character of the Summer and Fall. Much corn failed to head and was cut down and used for fodder. In place of this grain there was much wheat sowed, many fields where corn had failed being drilled.

"In addition prices were good. The farmers of the State sowed approximately 1,600,000 acres of wheat."

The Sound Sleep of Good Health.

The restorative power of sound sleep can not be over estimated and any ailment that prevents it is a menace to health. J. L. Southers, Eau Claire, Wis., says:—"For a long time I have been unable to sleep soundly nights, because of pains across my back and soreness of my kidneys. My appetite was very poor and my general condition was much run down. I have been taking Foley's Kidney Pills but a short time and now sleep as sound as a rock. I eat and enjoy my meals, and my general condition is greatly improved. I can honestly recommend Foley's Kidneys Pills as I know they have cured me."—C. M. Parrish.

LOCATING TRUFFLES.

The Hunter Works With a Trained Pig and a Pointed Staff.

The truffles looked exactly like white potatoes that had been very thoroughly dusted with powdered cinnamon. They were the size of white potatoes, and they had the white potato's irregular shape.

"On the way to the Riviera," said the host, "I stopped at Marseilles in order to see a truffler, or truffle gatherer, at work. Truffles come only from France. They cost, even over there, about $5 a pound. The taste? Well, mushroomy, but much richer.

"Our Marseilles truffler carried a pointed staff. His indispensable collaborator was a trained pig on a leash. The pig was like any other, only his snout was longer and better developed.

"We spectators had hardly walked 100 yards over the fields when the pig stopped and began to root near the foot of an oak. The truffler helped him to dig with the pointed staff. Some truffles appeared a foot underground, and the truffler pushed the pig aside, threw it an acorn and put the truffles in his bag.

"He found, or, rather, his pig found, a dozen truffles in the hour we watched him. At every find the pig was rewarded with an acorn. These pigs cost $60 apiece. The man made about $4 that morning."—Exchange.

HIS OWN COIN.

Knox Gave Root What Root Had Passed Out to Depew.

Senator Depew told a little story on himself and Senator Root in a speech at a dinner in Washington to Mr. Root by the New York Republican congressional delegation.

"When Root was secretary of state," said Senator Depew, "I went over to see him and asked him if he couldn't do something for me in the line of consular appointments. He said: 'Senator, I'm sorry. I would like to do something for New York, but'—and Mr. Root picked up a paper from his desk—'I see that New York's quota is now exceeded by 14 per cent.'

"Well," continued Senator Depew, "I kept going to see Senator Root for a year. Every time I went to see him he would remind me that New York's quota was exceeded by 14 per cent. Finally I said, 'Mr. Secretary, I think you're a great statesman, but your mathematics are inclined to be automatic.'

"After awhile Mr. Knox became secretary of state," Senator Depew said when the laughter had subsided. "Senator Root went up to see him about consular appointments. 'I'm sorry,' said Mr. Knox, 'but'—and he turned to a document file—'I find that New York's quota is now exceeded by 14 per cent.'"—New York Sun.

Major Pond and Bill Nye.

More than one successful lecture star had to thank Major Pond for his start. He had keen discrimination and not infrequently sought out and dragged upon the lecture platform an obscure genius who never thought to see himself before the footlights. Such a genius was Bill Nye. When the major found him he was acting as postmaster and editing the Laramie Boomerang over a livery stable. ("Walk down the alley, twist the gray mule's tail, take the elevator immediately!")

Pond persuaded him to try lecturing, and as there proved to be both money and useful publicity in it Nye was grateful and used for years to remember the major with characteristic notes, one of which had the following exhaustive signature:

Yours with a heart full of gratitude and a system full of drugs, paints, oil, turpentine, glass, putty and everything usually kept in a first class drug store.

Old Times at the Capital.

In recalling the lively and picturesque incidents which the old timers enjoyed in Washington one is moved almost to tears over the commonplace nature of his own times. John Adams used to bathe in the Potomac every morning at daylight because he had no bathtub in the White House, and no one ever pulled a kodak on him. President Taylor used to walk about the town and stop and chat with every one he met, like a policeman. A reception in the White House in these days is relieved of monotony only by the great crush of guests, who trample the clothes off one another's backs. Another president set up in the east room a 600 pound cheese and invited the multitude to come in and help itself, which the multitude proceeded to do.

Fat and Thin.

The two women encountered each other at a dance. They had not met for several years.

"How thin you have grown!" exclaimed one.

"How fat you've got to be!" the other cried, and they stood gazing at each other in some dismay.

"Before you come to blows," remarked a mutual friend who stood by, "let's take a vote as to which is worse, to get too fat or to get too thin."—New York Press.

Not Guilty.

"Doctor, why don't you sometimes denounce wickedness in high places?"

"Bless your soul, Brother Hardesty, I do! Have you forgotten that in my sermon two Sundays ago I spoke sharply against the practice of flirting in the elevated railway trains?"—Chicago Tribune.

All men have their frailties, and he who looks for a friend without imperfections will never find what he seeks.

A Bill Nye Story.

According to the Bookman, Bill Nye once made a short speech at an authors' dinner in London that was much relished by the bookmen present, including the publishers, at whom it was indirectly aimed.

"Just a year ago," said Nye, "I was walking on the principal street of Indianapolis when I met a man whose appearance showed that he was reduced to the very depths of poverty. His clothes were ragged, his face unshaven, his hair long and matted and his feet unshod. As I passed him a look of recognition came into his eye.

"'Nye, old fellow, don't you know me? Don't you know Abel P. Jones, who was your classmate at college?'

"'What, Jones! Is it really you? Well, well! What can I do for you?'

"'For heaven's sake, help me. I am starving. Lend me half a dollar.'

"I felt in my pockets. They were empty. I had no money myself. But a bright thought flashed through my mind.

"'Abel, I can't lend you the half dollar. I haven't got it. But, look here. I'll tell you what I will do—I'll let you publish my next book.'

"Gentlemen, that was just a year ago, and this month Abel P. Jones sent me an invitation to go to Europe with him in his steam yacht."

Needed an Explanation.

A little boy was often whipped by his father for lying. He usually took it as a matter of course, but on one occasion it seemed to excite him to reflection. After it was all over he stood before his father in a thoughtful way, which attracted that worthy's attention.

"My son," said the father, "what are you thinking about?"

"Father," said the son, "when you was a little boy, did you use to tell lies?"

"No, my son. When I was a little boy I did not tell lies."

"Father," returned the son, "when mother was a little girl, did she use to tell lies?"

"No, my son," replied the father. "When your mother was a little girl she did not tell lies. But why do you ask me these questions?"

"Well," said the little fellow, drawing a long sigh, "it is the most mysterious thing in the world to me that a father who never told lies when he was a little boy and a mother who never told lies when she was a little girl could have a boy that tells as many as I do."

Plaid and Tartan.

Will the southron ever learn that "plaid" is not a synonym for "tartan?" Not long ago an Englishman came into a hosier's establishment in Glasgow and asked a man behind the counter to show him some "plaid ties." The attendant, perhaps wondering what this new and weird article of wearing apparel could be, was completely baffled until explanation elicited the fact that a necktie with a tartan design was required. Dickens, too, is a sinner in this respect, for he makes Bob Sawyer say with regard to whether his political proclivities are "buff" or "blue"—"I'm a kind of plaid at present, a compound of all sorts of colors." Moreover, an English dictionary gives an adjectival meaning of "plaid" as "colored in squares." I've never heard such use in Scotland. Has any one else?—Scottish Field.

Hall Caine's Moonshine.

Authors and artists who have become well known by means of making the moon dance in the wrong houses of heaven are numerous, but we never expected Hall Caine to join the group. Yet in "The Scapegoat," chapter 23, on Israel's return from prison after evenfall, we find that "with a wave of his hand he was gone into the darkness. It was a wonderful night. The moon, which was in its first quarter, was still low in the east."

It was indeed a wonderful night. On no other night since the creation has the moon in its first quarter ever been seen low in the east.—London Star.

Experience of a Camping Party In Yellowstone Park.

In the Yellowstone park all wild animals are allowed to roam as they will, and it is against the law to shoot them. Some of these animals have become very tame and do not look on man as an enemy. In fact, the bears seem to think the hotels built there are for their convenience, as they visit the garbage cans nightly for their meals. Even tiny chipmunks will stand and scold people as they pass by on the road, and such little thieves as they are! They live in style on grain they steal from the hotel stables.

One night a party camped near one of the pretty ravines, and, being tired from a day's tramp, they had early gone into their tents to sleep—all except the boy, who enjoyed slumbering in a sleeping bag with the stars for a roof.

Early in the night they were aroused by a noise of falling pans in the kitchen wagon. Those who were not afraid rushed out and discovered a big black bear calmly eating his supper from the provisions. Not being allowed to shoot him, one grabbed a whip, another a broom, and they flourished these weapons about. Frightened and grunting, bruin clumsily scrambled away, when suddenly there was a livelier grunting from the bear, accompanied by an unearthly yell. Mr. Bruin in his hurried flight had stepped on the unnoticed outdoor sleeper, frightening him so much that afterward he slept under the tent roof.—Detroit Free Press.

Didn't Know Beans.

A young woman was talking in a restaurant. "You see," she was saying, "it was my first experience in cooking beans. We are so fond of them I wanted to be sure and have enough, so I ordered three pounds at the corner grocer's. This looked about the right amount, and I put them on the range and left them to boil tender. When I went into the kitchen again the range was covered with beans, so was the floor, and out of the kettle poured a steady stream of beans. I took part of them out, added more water and again left them. If you'll believe it I had to take out three more large portions of beans before the original mass became manageable. So I'm not ordering beans just yet even at a restaurant."—New York Sun.

The Truce of God.

The "truce of God" was introduced by the clergy of Guienne around about the year 1030. It was adopted in Spain about 1050, in England about 1080. According to this famous treaty, a cessation of all violent quarrels was enjoined under heavy penalties during all church festivals and from every Wednesday evening until the following Monday morning. This left only about eighty days in the year available for shooting and stabbing one's neighbors. The truce seems to have accomplished much good, notwithstanding the fact that it was very imperfectly observed.—New York American.

PUNCTUALITY

Has its Disagreeable Side Just as Everything Else Has.

So much is said about the virtue of punctuality that people who go in for it to any great extent are exceedingly uppish and disagreeable. Punctuality has its bad side, just as everything else has. People should remember this. If they are on time they only serve to throw into embarrassing relief the poor souls who come hurrying up 10 minutes late. It is smug to be precisely punctual. It is raising yourself above the rest of mankind, refusing to partake in its frailties. The ideal thing from the point of view of courtesy to others and decent humility about your own attainments is to be always 10 minutes late, or at least to appear so.

If you are to meet at the package office in the Grand Central Station at 4 o'clock, sit quietly in the middle of the hall until 12 minutes after 4; then, when you have seen the other person dash up, followed by panting porters and fairly dripping with explanations, wait until the arrival has had a second in which to recover self-respect and stroll up with a remark on Timbuctoo or the best way to cultivate carrots. This will insure your popularity and show you to be a person of kindness and forethought. At any rate, it is better than a pitiless standing at the place where you said you would be, your superiority increasing every minute, and confronting, upbraiding silently, the person who promised to meet you because you appeared a rather likable sort, but who finds you in your panoply of punctuality the very reverse of likable.

For be it remembered, that just as some people cannot be on time, others cannot, to save their skins, be late. So that they deserve not a whit of credit for it, and should, in fact, be reprimanded when they do it ostentatiously and in public.

The theatres have formed a charming habit of sending up the curtain just 15 minutes before the time stated, which by punctual members of the audience is considered shocking, for it permits the late arrivals to settle comfortably in their seats and say to the members of their family, when fumed and fussed and had a silly idea that the time to get to the theatre was at the hour suggested in the papers. "Now, you see, here we are in perfect time; couldn't be better," which arouses the worst nature of the punctual persons and divides families against themselves.—New York Evening Sun.

EARLY USE OF IRON

Reason for Believing it Originated in Central Europe.

The iron age is commonly believed to have begun in Africa or Asia. The latest investigations, according to The Chicago Tribune, prove that it was not worked in Egypt until the ninth century before the Christian era, or in Libys until 450 B. C., that the Semites adopted its use still later, and that it has been known in Uganda only with the last five or six centuries. In China iron is mentioned in 400 B. C. Bronze weapons were employed in China until 100 A. D., and in Japan until 700 A. D.

According to a Mr. Ridgeway, who has investigated this subject, the metallurgy of iron must have originated in Central Europe, especially in Noricum, which approximately represented modern Austria and Bavaria. Only at Hallstett and in Bosnia and Transylvania, from which countries the Achaians and Dorians are supposed to have migrated to Greece, are found evidences of a gradual introduction of iron, at first as an ornament applied to the bronze, which it ultimately displaced. Everywhere else iron was introduced suddenly, a fact which implies a foreign origin.

Meteoric iron was known in Egypt in remote antiquity, but no doubt it was worked as flints were worked, by cutting or chipping, and was not smelted. In other words, it was the metallurgy, not the knowledge of iron, that originated in Central Europe.

A Perfume Garden.

"A very little space will suffice to raise the sweetest of the perfume plants—this term being understood to mean those plants which in their flower, branch or root furnish a permanent fragrance, in a form immediately available for use," says Grace Tabor in Woman's Home Companion for April.

"Lavender comes at once to every one's mind in this counection, the famed sweet lavender of ancient linen room and press being probably the most widely known of all these plants, familiar even to those who have little idea how it grows.

"The seed is hsted, but it is better to buy the plant already started, for seedlings do not run true to variety. The lavendula vera is the true sweet lavender; give it an open, light, rather dry soil and full sunlight and free air.

"It is shrubby and grows from two to three feet high; its blossoms come in July and August, and are exquisitely fragrant. Cut the flower stalks with plenty of the surrounding green—the fragrance is in green corolla and even in leaf and branch—in clear weather, in early flower, and early in the morning before the dew is off the plant, and hang immediately to dry."

An Elopement

How a Man Assisted a Runaway Pair and What Came of It All.

By A. B. SEARLE

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

I was in the country for my health and, as directed by my doctor, taking long walks. At first I enjoyed my constitutionals immensely, but after awhile longed for some one to enjoy them with me. Then I thought that if something would only happen to me while rambling along over the country roads it would relieve my ennui. A footpad or a runaway horse would be a godsend.

But one morning something happened that was especially suited to my taste. I started out before breakfast for half an hour's exercise. I was moving along at a four mile an hour gait when, turning a bend in the road, I came face to face with a young man and a young woman. The man carried a small valise, while the girl held a tight grip on a tiny bag.

"I beg pardon, sir," said the man, "but does this road lead to G.?"

"Yes, but you must turn to the right when you come to the first intersecting road. Then you turn to the left at the next, cross a bridge"—

"Are there any short cuts?"

"Yes. You can leave the road just above here and cross a field; then, having passed the bridge, there is a wood through which"—

"One moment. Have you a heart?"

"A heart! Of course I have."

"Then I beseech you to help a pair of lovers to escape from the persecution of"—

"A tyrannical, contemptible, old curmudgeon of a father?"

"Worse. This young lady is the ward of an uncle who to gain her property for himself was to have sent her today to a lunatic asylum. I have—But it is a long story. We must go on. Will you help us?"

"I should think so. I know the way to the station. I'll pilot you and by the shortest possible route."

"Oh, sir," exclaimed the girl, raising her eyes to heaven as if to give thanks, "if you will do so you will save me from a madhouse. I shall soon be mad myself if I am shut up among those creatures!"

"Come on!" I cried.

"We have staked all on this flight," said the man as we hurried along, "this young girl's liberty and her fortune. The fortune was paid to her guardian last night and was to have been deposited in bank today. Oh, that villain! But, with your kind help, we shall outwit him."

"I've been there myself," I said. "My wife had money her father desired to control, and he acted a villainous part in the matter. To this very day I would like to throttle him."

"What we fear," the man went on, "is that the young lady's uncle will get on our track, have what we are carrying taken from us, and, once in the meshes of the law, we may never recover it."

"But that is nothing," moaned the girl, "to being shut up in that dreadful asylum."

"Don't think of it, sweetheart," said the man encouragingly. "With this kind gentleman's assistance we shall escape."

We were crossing the field I had referred to when the man suddenly stopped and listened. We could distinctly hear the sound of a galloping horse and rattle of wheels.

"Come on!" cried the lover. "We must reach that wood before our pursuers come in sight of us."

We hurried on, reached the edge of the wood and crossed a bridge. Then the man stopped again.

"Gwendolin, dear," he said, "I'll tell you what we'll do. We'll hide the bonds and your jewels under this bridge. No one will know where they are but us and this gentleman. I'm sure we can trust him with the secret."

"To be sure we can. I never saw a more honest countenance," the girl rejoined. "But, Edgar, darling, I can't bear to leave my jewels I have here in my bag. Mother gave them to me on her deathbed. I'd rather keep them with me. Once on the train, I think I can conceal them."

While this brief dialogue was in progress the man dashed down under the bridge and thrust his valise between an abutment and the flooring; then, rejoining us, we all went on through the wood.

"I should think," I said to him, "that if they are after you they would head you off at the station."

"I never thought of that," he replied, coming to a halt, then after a pause:

"What do you advise?"

"Please help us," pleaded the girl. "Do something to save me from that awful madhouse. You are so much cooler than either of us. So much depends on our getting away that we are in no condition to think."

I became very much interested, not only from sympathy, but from the brain work involved in assisting this poor girl in making her escape. I always loved intricate problems and especially quick decisions.

"I am living," I said, "at a farmhouse near by. I think you had better come there with me and keep dark till you are supposed to have got away. I think I can fix it so that your identity will not be known there, and tonight, under cover of the darkness, you can walk to B. and take a train. Possibly I may furnish you with disguises."

"If you will do this," said the man, "I'll bless you forever."

The girl seemed to be too much affected to speak. She impulsively seized my hand and kissed it.

Fortunately for our concealment, the wood we were in extended to within a hundred yards of the farmhouse where I was staying. I conducted the couple to this rear point, and from there we passed through a long arbor covered with grapevines and entered the house. I introduced them to the family as friends of mine who had come to the country and were looking for a boarding place. I took them both up to my room, where they would not be seen if any one should call to look for them.

After a brief conversation apart between the lovers the man came to me and said that the girl felt the delicacy of her position and thought they should be married. I concurred in this, for I thought that marriage under the law would give him authority over his wife in precedence to her guardian. But on talking the matter over we all concluded that to bring in a clergyman at so critical a period might give the couple away. Indeed, they trembled during the day lest the family in the house, knowing of their presence, might reveal it to their pursuers.

I kept them in my room, and only once did they get a scare. A man drove by in a buggy, stopped, and I heard him ask the farmer if he had seen anything of two old men whom he described. The farmer said he had not, and the man in the buggy drove on.

When night came and the family in the house had gone to bed, I looked about the house and, returning, informed the couple that the coast was clear. Before leaving they both expressed their gratitude to me with tears in their eyes. The man begged me to go to the bridge the next day, secure the valise and bring it to my room to keep for its owner till it should be called for. I was flattered by the confidence reposed in me and made the desired promise. With this the girl flung her arms around my neck and kissed me. Then I put out the light, and, all of us moving on tiptoe, I led them out into the starlight. They started off in a direction away from where we had been in the morning.

Then I went upstairs to my room, not only feeling that a fine breach had been made in the monotony of my life, but that I had done what I could to right a great wrong. I lay awake for some time thinking of the pair pursuing their way through the darkness and sincerely hoped they would be so far away before morning that pursuit would avail nothing.

For my walk the next morning I had an object. I would go to the bridge, secure the valise hidden there, bring it to my room and keep it locked in my closet. There is something fascinating in possessing such a secret and especially so in having a treasure committed to one's keeping. I wondered what was the value of the bonds to which the man had referred. I resolved to make an inventory of everything the valise contained in order that there should be no doubt about the exact amount for which I was responsible. I was rather glad the young girl had held on to her jewels. There was a trifle more responsibility even in the bonds than I would, under less interesting circumstances, have cared to take.

On reaching the bridge I looked about me and listened to make sure no one was near to observe my movements, then went down and thrust my arm back into a pocket where I had seen the man put the valise.

No valise was there!

I confess I was somewhat surprised. When they left me they had moved away from the bridge. They must have changed their minds and returned. Or had the treasure been discovered?

Reluctantly I left the place and was walking up the incline when I heard a voice:

"Hands up!"

Not having been used to this order, I was gaping around to discover where the voice came from when a bullet, followed quickly by a report, sang over my head. This admonished me as to the meaning of the words. I put my hands above my head.

A man with a drawn revolver advanced from behind a tree and clapped a pair of handcuffs on me.

"Will you kindly inform me, sir," I asked, "what this means?"

"It means that you were looking for the swag captured before daylight yesterday morning in the —th National bank. I suppose some of your pals have taken it."

"Do you mean to tell me," I exclaimed, "that that eloping couple were bank robbers?"

"I don't know what you mean by an eloping couple, but two cracksmen disguised as old men were given the plunder. They afterward changed their disguise to represent a young man and a girl."

"Great heavens," I muttered to myself, "was that creature who was too virtuous to be going about unmarried with her lover a man?"

It was even so. I had been harboring two desperate criminals who had got away with $40,000 in bank bills. As to the "girl's" jewels, they were a myth. I spent several days in the care of the police, but finally on proving my respectability I was released. The couple I had harbored were later on captured with the swag on them.

I returned to the city, having had quite enough of my doctor's method for regaining my health. At any rate, I did not care to try again.

Where Every Drop Counts.

In the Yakima Valley, Washington, where the big apples are grown, and bearing orchards sell at one thousand dollars an acre, rain is scarce. But now and then during the growing season a light rain will fall for a few minutes. These rains, says the Youth's Companion, are highly prized, for irrigation water is measured closely, and served to each user in proportion to his acreage.

Last summer a fruit-grower who owns 40 acres of orchard was rejoicing in one of these precipitations of moisture, when one of his hired men entered the house.

"Why don't you stay in out of the rain?" inquired the fruit grower.

"Oh, that's all right," replied the man. "A little dew like that doesn't bother me a bit; I can work right along just the same."

"That isn't the point!" explained the rancher. "Next time it rains you come into the house. I want that water on the land!"

One Conductor Who Was Cured.

Mr. Wilford Adams is his name, and he writes about it. -"Some time ago I was confined to my bed with chronic rheumatism. I used two bottles of Foley's Kidney Remedy with good effect, and the third bottle put me on my feet and I resumed work as conductor on the Lexington, Ky., Street Railway. It gave me more relief than any medicine I had ever used, and it will do all you claim in cases of rheumatism." Foley's Kidney Remedy cures rheumatism by eliminating the uric acid from the blood." —C. M. Parrish.

TO MEET ENUMERATORS

Census Supervisor Hamilton Plans Conference at Bellefonte.

For some reason thus far unexplained a letter from Census Supervisor Samuel R. Hamilton, at Bradford, addressed to "The Republican" and containing a list of the census enumerators appointed for Centre county, was never received at this office. It was due to this fact that "The Republican" was last week unable to publish the names of the several persons appointed for Centre County. In a letter from Supervisor Hamilton to the editor of "The Republican," on Monday, last the former makes the positive assertion that the list of enumerators was addressed to this paper. What became of his letter we do not know. We do know that it was not received and that we have instituted an investigation to learn the cause for its strange disappearance.

Supervisor Hamilton advises us that it is his intention to visit Bellefonte in the near future for a conference with the several census enumerators appointed for Centre County. He has not fixed the date for this conference. The several enumerators appointed, follow.

Mr. Patton Visits Our County.

Charles E. Patton, of Curwensville, one of the aspirants for the Republican nomination for Congress in the Twenty-first Congressional District, was a visitor to Bellefonte this week. While in town Mr. Patton called at "The Republican" office to pay his respects. While not quite so handsome, Mr. Patton possesses many of the pleasing characteristics of his late brother, Senator Patton, who had many warm friends in Centre county. Mr. Patton said that the purpose of his visit here was to meet the people, show them what he looks like and frankly say to them that he wants their support at the primaries on June 4. This was his first visit to Centre county since he announced his candidacy and he expressed himself as much pleased and greatly encouraged with the greeting accorded him by our citizens. Before returning home Mr. Patton visited a number of points in the county. It is his intention to make another visit to Centre county before the primaries are held. Mr. Patton is young, affable, active and well versed on public questions. Should he win the nomination and election it is our candid judgment that he will make an able representative at Washington for the people of the Twenty-first district.

Surprising Facts About the Patent Medicine Business.

"The Fourth Estate" has been warning publishers about the risk in allowing credit to new medicine concerns. It is said that there have been only one or two of the thousands of new proprietary medicine houses have made any considerable money that have started the past twenty years and only a very few more that have met with even moderate success. It is the general impression that the business is immensely profitable while the facts are that there is a larger percentage of failures than in any other line. The new concerns usually start with lots of confidence in the merit of their goods and advertising but soon exhaust their capital leaving dealers who have stocked their medicines with unsalable goods on their shelves. It is the experience of many publishers that have accepted this new business that they have been compelled to charge off their bills to profit and loss.

There are many old and reliable medicine houses that continue to do a good or increasing business from year to year but the new ones are finding it more and more difficult to become established.—Des Moines (Iowa) Daily Capital.

Mr. Emery's Democratic Boosters.

When Democrats become solicitous for the welfare of the Republican party it is a pretty good time to bolt the shutters and lock the doors, and, as the wise old Dutchman said, "look a leedle out."

It is amusing to note the sly attempts of certain old Democrats, who have become gray in serving the Democratic machine, to advocate the nomination of Lewis Emery, Jr., for Congress on the Republican ticket. The purpose is quite plain. They calculate that the nomination of Emery would breed party strife and in the end result in profit to the Democratic party.

The "Democratic Watchman" is one of the Guffey organs at present trying to prove that Emery is a rip-roaring Republican from 'way back. It is a noticeable fact that the Democratic newspapers are quite alone in the movement to prove that Mr. Emery's Republicanism is all wool and a yard wide. A Democratic voucher for any man's Republicanism may well be looked upon with suspicion.

No one in the State holds Mr. Emery in greater contempt than the "Watchman." As a matter of practical politics the "Watchman" wants Mr. Emery nominated on the Republican ticket. Once nominated by the Republicans the "Watchman" would no longer conceal its contempt for Mr. Emery but would yell itself hoarse in urging his defeat.

That Mr. Emery is in the game for Emery and is willing to play both ends, is demonstrated in the fact that he publishes his announcement card, appealing for Republican support, in both Republican and Democratic newspapers. Seeking Republican support through Democratic channels would, at best, suggest a highly inflamed desire to get the goods without regard for the methods employed. As the recent Democratic candidate for Governor, Mr. Emery naturally turns for support to Democrats and those Republicans who get their doctrine and guidance from Democratic newspapers.

The "Watchman," which in advance of the June primaries is an Emery booster, would have its readers believe that it was Emery's persistence in saying that he was a Republican that caused his defeat for Governor four years ago; or, in other words, that caused him to be knifed by Democrats.

The "Watchman" is a delightful liar, but a liar nevertheless. Emery was knifed by the Guffey Democrats because Guffey ordered it, and Guffey ordered it because his Democratic convention ran away from him and despite his protest nominated Emery for Governor.

Many Democrats, other than those controlled by Guffey, also refused to vote for Emery because they believed that a man should be a Democrat to merit a place on the Democratic ticket, or a Republican to be worthy a place on the Republican ticket; that he should belong to one party or the other and not try to straddle both. Mr. Emery was not elected Governor because the people of Pennsylvania were unwilling to accept him and his extravagant statements. They announced at the polls that they much preferred to entrust their affairs in the hands of Governor Stuart, and in the closing months of his administration he has the satisfaction of knowing that the people of this great commonwealth have never regretted their decision.

The "Watchman" refers in a vague sort of way to the history of the Emery campaign and adds that the editor of "The Republican" is fully informed on the subject. We are informed on a large part of that campaign and will relate a few edifying chapters on which the "Watchman" is eloquently silent.

Mr. Emery was slated for the Lincoln party nomination for Governor and the bosses of that outfit had their slate ratified by the Philadelphia convention. They then set about to have Emery nominated on the Democratic ticket. In this they met with opposition at the hands of Guffey and Donnelly and Ryan, in Philadelphia, and others, including certain Centre County Democrats within a stone's throw of "The Republican" office.

There was one Guffey Democrat who refused to line up with Guffey and who declared for Emery. He was former State chairman J. K. P. Hall, of Elk county. His brother, Harry Alvin Hall, was an aspirant for the Democratic nomination for judge in the Clinton-Elk-Cameron district. Harry Alvin Hall was not the choice of many leading Democrats in the district, especially in Clinton county. His nomination was, however, insisted upon by his brother, J. K. P. Hall, and in return for the latter's declaration for Emery for Governor Harry Alvin Hall was made the Lincoln party nominee for Judge. This was J. K. P. Hall's sole interest in advocating the nomination of Emery for Governor on the Democratic ticket, and he cleverly worked his game to a successful finish.

When the Democratic State convention was held Guffey remained in his room at the hotel, disgusted and angry, but powerless to check the wave of hysteria that for a time prevailed. Emery was nominated and Guffey, thoroughly dejected, took the first train out of Harrisburg. He vowed to be revenged and he kept his vow. Emery went on the stump. His campaign speeches were so violent, so reckless and so radical, that each day saw him losing ground. Meanwhile Guffey and his agents were quietly at work in every county in the State. In the closing hours of the campaign it was known that every Guffey Democrat in the State was primed to knife Emery at the polls. How well they did their work was revealed in the returns from every county. Emery went down to the defeat he deserved and the Guffey Democrats toasted one another upon the effective use of the knife in such experienced hands and when put to such good use.

Mr. Emery made his fight as the Democratic candidate and lost. He would now ask Republicans to accord him their support for the Republican nomination for Congress. We submit to the Republicans of this district this question: By what right is Mr. Emery entitled to your support, to the support of your party which he such a short time ago tried to defeat?

"The Republican" has no choice among the several Republicans who aspire for the party nomination for Congress. We do, however, hope to see a Republican nominated. We take the ground that the Republican party is big enough to nominate from among its numbers one of whom it cannot be said that he deserted in the hour of peril.

W. Harrison Walker, a Democrat, who was mentioned as a candidate for the Democratic nomination for Congress, has publicly announced that he is no longer an aspirant. This leaves the Democratic field open, for the time being at least. If the "Watchman" is even half-sincere in its cheap eulogy of Mr. Emery, let it now advocate his nomination on the Democratic ticket. Its a thousand to one shot the "Watchman" doesn't have the nerve.

Dog Climbed Mont Blanc Alone.

There is a dog living at Les Praz, near Chamonix, says a writer in the Strand, which in the summer of 1908, distinguished himself by climbing Mont Blanc. His master, a workman, was employed on repairs to the observatory on the summit, and one morning, after having been seen by his owner's wife at 8 o'clock, the dog disappeared. He must have traced his master by scent, for he arrived at the summit at half past two in the afternoon, having accomplished in six and a half hours what usually is estimated to require 13 hours for a man. The presence of some tourists at the top insured this fact being properly attested and Mont Blanc, as the dog is now called, is quite a favorite in his village.

"The Thespians."

A larger or more fashionable audience has not assembled in Garman's Opera house this season than that which witnessed the presentation of "The Gay Soubrette", by "The Thespians", of State College. That popular organization, which has gained such an enviable reputation, more than lived up to the flattering criticisms of its work of the present season. The large crowd expected big things and in this was not disappointed. The production surpassed many other attractions presented this year by professional companies.

Arrangements are about completed for the annual commencement exercises of the High school. The baccalaureate sermon to the class of 1910 will be preached in the Methodist Church Sunday evening, April 10 by Rev. H. I. Crow, pastor of the Reformed church, at Hublersburg. The graduating exercises will take place in the Methodist church on the Tuesday evening following, when the class of eight will receive their diplomas. The commencement address will be delivered by Prof. R. L. Watts, of the Pennsylvania State College. In order to meet the expenses incident to the graduating services a small admission will be charged on Tuesday evening. An exceptional feature of the class this year is the fact that the boys are largely in the majority, there being seven male members to only one of the opposite sex. They are Russell Gardner, Harry Muffly, Charles Robb, Horace and Harold Schenck, Paul Hurd, Fred Pletcher and Mary Weirick.

On Friday evening last Prof. J. C. Weirick, principal of the High school, tendered a reception to the members of the Senior class at his home.

At a recent meeting of the High school alumni the following officers were elected: President, Cameron Holter; vice president, Emma Pletcher; secretary, Lauretta Weber; assistant secretary, Josephine Henderson; treasurer, Florence Confer. The alumni reception and banquet will take place in the High school on Tuesday night, April 12, following the graduating exercises at the Methodist church.

Mr. Pletcher was formerly a teacher in our schools and is thoroughly capable of doing the work in a manner that will meet the approval of his Uncle Samuel.

Rev. E. F. Foust and family, the former having recently accepted the call of the Reformed church here, are now comfortably located in their new home, the Mayes residence, near the Evangelical church. On Saturday the members of the several congregations which he will serve tendered them a reception and on Sunday he occupied the pulpit here for the first as the beginning of his pastorate. Rev. The water committee reported the leaky pave wash at the Cooke property taken out. Sandy Ridge.

Stewart Cubb, the interesting little six-year-old son of Levi and Ellie Cowher, died after a very brief illness on Tuesday morning, March 29. On Monday he seemed quite well but in the evening, soon after supper, he was attacked with a very severe form of croup. Medical aid was summoned and everything possible was done for him, but his suffering continued without relief. His ailment had developed into membranous croup and after a night of intense suffering he passed away, about 8 o'clock on Tuesday morning. Funeral services were held at the home of his parents on Wednesday afternoon, with interment in the Osceola cemetery. He was a bright little child and the friend of all who knew him. He had attended school regularly until a very short time ago, when he, with his sisters and brothers, was taken with the measles. He had recovered from the measles and was considered well. Besides his grief-stricken parents, he leaves to mourn his sudden death two brothers and two sisters.

On Saturday, April 2, Mary C., daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Hiram Kramer, died in a hospital at Philadelphia. The circumstances connected with her death are especially sad. She had been away from home for over a year, staying with friends in that city, when she was stricken with typhoid pneumonia and removed to a hospital. Her mother went to her at once, and for a while there seemed hope for recovery, but she took a sudden turn for the worse and never rallied. Her father was sent for and was with her about a week before her death. Her parents are inconsolable, and her mother has not been able to be out of bed since she reached home. Mr. and Mrs. Kramer have the deep sympathy of their many friends.

On Monday afternoon, about 3 o'clock, the silent messenger entered the home of Charles and Jenny Carney and bore hence the spirit of their little daughter, Elizabeth Geraldine, aged 1 year and 9 months. She was naturally weak and had never been quite well during her short life. She took measles which in a short time developed into pneumonia and her delicate constitution could not withstand it. All the many friends of Mr. and Mrs. Carney extend to them loving sympathy, more especially because we remember the bright, little daughter, near the age of little Elizabeth, who was parted from them by the same disease about three or four years ago.

Measles have become an alarming epidemic here; nearly every family have them and some cases are becoming quite serious.

"Call of the Wild."

An attraction that has had a tremendous amount of success in New York is "Call of the Wild" in which Franklin Wookruff is the star. To him can be attributed much of the success as it is a known fact that anything with his name attached to it means a winner. For Mr. Woodruff is a cultured actor and works with might and main on the stage from the rise until the decent of the curtain.

The drawing powers of the play are said to be extraordinary and are brought out by the talented actor. His portrayal of John Ermine of the Yellowstone has received much praise from both the press and public. In the "Call of the Wild" he will be seen to best of advantage in this play. It is being heralded as the greatest drama of modern times. It will please any number of people to know that this play will be presented at Garman's Opera House, Saturday, April 9, with both a matinee and evening performance.

"Mary Ann Hubble."

I once knew a woman named Mary Ann Hubble,
And this woman always was looking for trouble—
She was looking all day from the time she got up
To the candlelight hour when she sat down to sup.
She would look all around her and search high and low,
Just looking for trouble where'er she would go.

And you may be sure that this Mary Ann Hubble
Had more than her share of what people call trouble.

How very tiresome is the man
Who always is explaining, "Can
You beat it?"
I hate that phrase. It makes me swear,
I duck and dodge, but everywhere

It's awful, but I have a plan
To meet it.
The moment some one asks me that
For answer I put on my hat
And beat it.

M. J. H. Fabre, the famous French automologist, has recently been studying the glowworm. M. Fabre finds that both male and female are luminous, although in the former the light is much feebler. Even the eggs and larvae are faintly luminous. The light is produced on the last three segments of the abdomen.

It may perhaps be worth while pointing out, says The London Globe, that the glowworm is not a worm, but an insect belonging to the great order of beetles, the Coleopetera. The mistaken name no doubt arises from the fact that the female is grublike in form, without either wings or elytra, and so singularly unlike a typical beetle. The male, however, possesses both and flies swiftly. Luminosity among insects indeed is chiefly found in the beetle order. The Mexican fireflies (Pyrophorus), for example, are beetles. Some of them give sufficient light to read by. Waterton sometimes used them in this way to write up his diary when wandering in the South American forests.

In adult life the glowworm is a vegetarian, feeding on tender leaves of plants, but while a grub it is carnivorous, feeding on snails and slugs. The light of the glowworm and fireflies has been called phosphorescent and attributed to phosphorus. One investigator, Jousset de Bellesme, has stated his conviction that it is phosphoretted hydrogen gas stored up in the cellular tissues and in communication with the narvors and respiratory system.

M. Fabre, however, finds that phosphorus does not enter into the composition of the luminous substance of the glowworm. Under the microscope it is seen to be a sort of white plaster covering the epidermis and full of branching tubes. These, according to M. Fabre, supply the plaster with oxygen and so render it luminous. Thus the light is caused by the oxidation of something the nature of which the great naturalist has not yet been able to determine.

According to M. Fabre's observation the light is caused by the supply of oxygen which is under the control of the animal's breathing apparatus. Thus the glowworm can start, increase or extinguish the light at will. It has often indeed been observed to diminish or extinguish its light when approached. Gilbert White has an interesting note on this point. Observing two which had been brought into the garden, he found that they put out their lamps between 11 and 12, and shone no more for the rest of the night. It would appear, then that whatever the nature of the luminous substance, this is only active when supplied with oxygen by the animal.

However produced, it is said that the light of firefly and glowworm is the most economical known. Economical, that is, in the sense that the greatest part of the energy expended in producing it really appear as light. Is the very best artificial system of fighting yet invented only a small percentage of the energy expended on its production is turned into light, the rest appearing as heat and other invisible vibrations.

Tenderfoot at Poker.

"Poor Pat Sheedy," said a sporting editor, "used to entertain me when I visited his art shop with gambling tales.

"There was one tale about a sandwich that I rather liked. It seems, according to this tale, that a barkeeper in Tombstone, or Dead Cat, or some such town, connived with three sharpers, and God help any tenderfood that ever ventured to sit in a little poker game among that crew!

"One night the tenderest tenderfoot imaginable after half a dozen drinks in the saloon agreed to take a hand in a dollar-limit game.

"Things went along in the usual way for awhile; then an amazing series of nods and winks began to pass about. The bartender had signaled that the tenderfoot held four kings on the draw. There were more nods and winks and betting began.

"In the midst of the betting a waiter brought sandwiches and whisky in order to distract the tenderfoot, and while the poor dupe was tossing off his drink the sharper next him slipped a sixth card onto his hand, thus, of course, nullifying it.

"The unconscious tenderfoot took up a huge sandwich, bit off a large mouthful, and began to bet again. Right and left, of course, they raised him. He ate on, and bet away calmly. An enormous sum lay on the table.

"Then, suddenly, the bartender resumed his nods and winks. He was terribly excited. Something was wrong. The sharpers, a little anxious, called the tenderfoot.

"The tenderfoot finished the last bite of his sandwich, took a long drink of whisky and laid down his original five cards. Then, in silence, he gathered in his vast pile of winnings and with a cool nod took his leave.

"After his departure there was a terrible time.

"'What the dickens did he do with that sixth card?'" the sharpers cried.

"'Didn't you see? Didn't you see?'" cried the bartender, dancing up and down with rage. 'He ate it with his sandwich!'"—Washington Post.

THE NORTHERN GENIUS

Not Likely Ever to be Clear, Sure or Untroubled.

The Anglo-Saxon melancholy is the most terrible power the human heart ever conceived; by comparison the vaunted Celtic melancholy is as a young girl weeping over her dead dove. But the Anglo-Saxon melancholy and awe brought forth the strongest force in the world—Anglo-Saxon fortitude; and it went down into the pit of hell and brought forth the key of heaven, and in the fires of hell it brewed out of poison the cordial of immortality. Does Browning's optimism seem a strange growth of the black fen and Henley's savage courage and unlikely blossom? Both are roofed in the depth of racial consciousness and both have the healing potency reserved to recognized affinity. Yes; if not the goal of life, then life itself must be the good; if not accomplishment, then ceaseless endeavor; if not success, then perpetual overcoming; if not repose, triumphant labor. If this is so, we of the North may hold our heads high and square our shoulders, knowing ourselves quite literally every one a conqueror. Courage and strength come when we cease saying "I want," and begin to say "I will." Courage and strength to face the shadows and all our bad dreams. The will may be the only thing left a man, but it is also the only thing needful. If experience and not happiness is the end of life, then the mists and apprehensions and indeterminate terrors are of the very soul-stuff itself.

The northern genus will never be clear or sure or untroubled. It will live in the shadows, it will have dark places for its dreams to hide, and it will always loath perpetual clear light, unending sound and brightness. It is akin to the ancient earth forces whose power is not yet dead. For it is those who sit in darkness who most passionately seek the source whence all light flows, and with tears and blood they will seek it, unresting and indomitable. The inward light is the true light. The great mystics have, is the true light. They were refiedlike silver in the furnace, made from time to time radiant, assured, ecstatic —Harper's Weekly.

Queer Ways in Africa.

One of the queer customs of the Baamba race in Africa is cannibalism of a particularly loathsome form, according to a correspondent. Families exchange their young children, who are then eaten. One correspondent says that the Baamba in many cases file their teeth, but this practice is not quite general. They are jovial, despite these singular characteristics. The Bunyoros, another tribe, have an unpleasant custom of extracting the four lower incisors, which causes the upper teeth to grow foward, imparting to their mouth a most unbecoming, rabbit-like appearance.

The Bahiam, he says again, believe vaguely in an all-power deity, who is associated mainly with rain, thunder and other weather phenomena. They endeavor to propitiate various devils, most of whom are connected with the prevalent diseases, by erecting joss houses in which food and beer are placed. They invariably carry round the neck wooden charms or small goats' horns, which have been invested with magical power by the medicine men, and usually wear wire bracelets and anklets.

Although mosquitoes of several varieties abound, the Awata appear to a great extent to be immune from malaria. When death takes place the body is disposed of by being placed on a small raft of reeds and covered over by a mat of the same material; this strange craft is floated away far into the interior of the swamp and abendomed. Many of the natives find it hard to traverse any considerable distance on dry land, a possible explanation being that their feet have become soft by continual contact with the water, as most of the canoes are by no means water-tight.—Geographical Journal.

Summer Frocks.

"The temptation to have twice as many dresses this summer as you need is really a very big sort of a temptation", says Grace Margaret Gould in Woman's Home Companion for April. "The new fabrics are so alluring that each one seems just suited to a certain type of gown. The linens, for instance, are shown in the greatest number of new and fascinating weaves. There is the granite linen, which resembles a basket weaves and has a sheen of silk through it, and is just the smartest sort of material for a once-piece dress or a skirt-and-coat suit. Then there is the new linen which comes in the very latest French shades and is hard to tell from poplin. It shows a decided cord. The Shantung linens are a serviceable substitute for the silks by that name, and every woman who gets just a bit of a glimpse of the new fancy linens in black and white effects will feel she must have at least one dress fashioned of them."

THE PROPER COURSE

Information of Priceless Value to Every Bellefonte Citizen.

How to act in an emergency is knowledge of inestimable worth, and this is particularly true of the diseases and ills of the human body. If you suffer with backache, urinary disorders, or any form of kidney trouble, the advice contained in the following statement will add a valuable asset to your store of knowledge. What could be more convincing proof of the efficiency of Doan's Kidney Pills than the statement of Bellefonte citizens who have been permanently cured?

Mrs. James Rine, 239 W. High St., Bellefonte, Pa., says: "Some years ago I procured Doan's Kidney Pills at Green's Pharmacy Co., and their use cured me of kidney complaint and backache that had caused me no end of suffering. At that time I told of my experience in a public statement and I now take pleasure in confirming that testimonial. The relief Doan's Kidney Pills gave me has been permanent and I have had no further need of a kidney medicine."

Separate Coats for Spring.

In considering your actual dress needs for spring this year," says Grace Margaret Gould in Woman's Home Companion for April, "don't overlook the separate coat. It is necessary not only for convenience's sake, but Fashion is regarding it just now with very particular favor. So many dresses are worn that one or more long separate coats are very much needed to make the spring wardrobe complete.

"No one style leads—it is the same story with the coat as with the frock, each is now suited to one's individual tastes and special needs. Long loose-fitting coats of pongee and corded tussah or linen in the natural color will be very much worn made with full sleeves and fastening in double-breasted style. The specially new feature of these coats is the low one-side rever at the right side, which is faced with the same sort of silk that is used for the lining, and right here let me say that never has foulard had such a great vogue as a lining silk as this spring. Gay-colored foulards are used to line natural-colored pongee coats."

Washing White Silk Gloves and Hose.

Wash in warm soapsuds, rinse and hang in a dark room. The best time to wash them is at night; they will be dry by morning. It is the light which turns them yellow.—From Woman's Home Companion for April.

SCOPE OF PENSION SYSTEM

Interesting Statistics of Work of Pennsylvania Railroad Co.

Some idea of the scope of the Pension System of the Pennsylvania Railroad, East and West of Pittsburgh and Erie, may be gathered from figures given out some days ago showing that last year the sum of $786,345.15 in pension allowance was paid to a total of 3,465 retired employes. The appropriations for pensions made by the different companies of the Pennsylvania System amounted to $882,500.00.

The total number of employes of the Pennsylvania System on December 31st, 1909, was 181,987, of which 123,628 were on the Lines East of Pittsburgh and Erie, and 58,359 on the Lines West of Pittsburgh. The total number of retired employes who were on the pension rolls December 31st was 3,165, of which 506 were retired from active service during the year.

The Pennsylvania Pension System basis for payment of pension allowances provides that there shall be paid for each year of service one per cent of the average regular monthly pay for the ten years immediately preceding retirement, determined by ascertaining the total amount of wages the employe actually earned and for which he was carried on the pay-rolls during the ten year period and dividing that amount by 120 calendar months. The pension allowances are paid monthly.

The Pennsylvania was the first American Railroad to establish a pension System for its employes on a purely distinctive basis, wholly dissociated from any other provident undertaking, and financed exclusively from the Company revenues. In January, 1900, a pension department was started on the Lines East of Pittsburgh. The following year it was extended to cover the Pennsylvania Lines West of Pittsburgh. During the ten years in which the pension system has been operating the total payments have amounted to $5,512,529.57.

An interesting comparison is furnished by the figures showing the pension payments of twelve of the leading roads of the country in the fiscal year ending June 30th. 1907, the latest report obtainable. With some 303,000 employes, 1,765 of whom were retired, the total payments of these roads amounted to $358,519 65, or less than half of the total payments of the Pennsylvania the past year, and six per cent of what the Pennsylvania alone has paid out in the ten years since January 1st, 1900. The average pension paid by the Pennsylvania last year was $254.57, while the average paid on the twelve other principal railroads in the year ending June 30th, 1907 was $203.00, or approximately twenty per cent less than the payments on the Pennsylvania Railroad.

Why Plain Men an Attractive.

A fact that no one can deny is that for some women a really plain man seems to have a definite power of attraction. Can it be that, beautiful themselves, they find a charm in their opposite; or is it that they brook no rival near the throne, and see in a handsome man more or less of a competitor? A good-looking husband or brother attracts notice, and Her Royal Highness Woman may refuse to be in the background. At any rate, there can be no doubt that an ugly man seems often to wield an influence that is quite uncanny.

The trend of the times may have something to say on the subject. A modern woman, with her brains and her freedom and her strenuous ideals, has no use for what is weak, insipid and decadent. She has no place in her heart for the scented exquisite, who waves his hair, twists his mustache, manicures his hands, and admires his face in the looking-glass. In fact, pink and white prettiness is now at a discount, and most of us would sooner see our men brown and battered and serenely conscious of their own lack of attractions. Rough-hewn features, we say, show strength, and a plain form may be the shell of a great soul, a keen brain, and soaring ambitions. Certain it is that the Adonis type has gone out of fashion. The woman of to-day scorns the "beauty man," avoids him as a friend, and disregards him as a husband.—Mrs. Fitzroy Stewart in the Strand.

Candied Pineapple Strips.

"Candied pineapple strips are delicious and are easily prepared," says Sally Sanders in Woman's Home Companion for April. The fruit is first peeled, then cut in strips two inches long, half an inch wide and about a quarter of an inch thick. Measure the fruit and add half the quantity of granulated sugar and let it stand until the sugar is dissolved, which may be nearly twenty-four hours. Drain off the juice and boil it five minutes, then add the fruit and cook for three or four minutes, drain the pineapple and spread on a platter to dry. The process may be hastened by putting the platter in the sun, the warming-closet or even on the top of a radiator. The fruit should be turned once and then rolled in fine granulated sugar. The process is a much more lengthy one than that required for the fruit peel. A few pieces put in each box makes a delicious addition."

Foley's Kidney Remedy will cure any case of kidney and bladder trouble not beyond the reach of medicine. No medicine can do more.—C. M. Parrish.

A Defeated Conscience.

The secretary of the Kansas State Historical society tells a story about an early day Kansas justice of the peace who will be nameless here:

"This J. P.," said the secretary, "would marry a couple one day as justice of the peace and divorce them the next as notary public."

One time, as the story ran, a man surrendered himself to this J. P.

"An' phwat's the matter?" asked the judge.

"I killed a man out here on the prairie in a fight," was the reply. "I want to give myself up."

"You did kill him, sor?" asked the J. P.

"Yes, sir," was the reply.

"Who saw you?" asked the J. P.

"Nobody."

"An' nobody saw you kill 'im?"

"No, sir. Just we two were there."

"An' you're shure nobody saw you?" reiterated the J. P.

"Of course I'm sure," was the reply.

"Thin you're discharged," said the J. P., bringing his fist down on the table. "You're discharged. You can't 'criminate yourself. Fifty dollars, please!"—Kansas City Journal.

Trouble For Hubby.

At a recent tea party where the fare provided could not by any means be termed palatable a guessing game was instituted, and the lady who won it was asked to say what she would have as a prize. She greatly flattered her young hostess by requesting a slice of the cake with which some of them had desperately struggled at tea time.

"Why did you ask for that stuff?" a disappointed and still hungry youth asked her. "You know very well it isn't fit to eat."

"I have a definite purpose in view," answered the young lady, carefully placing the piece of cake where there would be no possibility of her forgetting it. "I mean to make my husband eat it—if necesary, to force it down his throat crumb by crumb—and thus convince him that somewhere in the wide, wide world there is an even worse cook than he imagines his inexperienced young wife to be."—Pearson's Weekly.

A Tipless Curse.

"Talk about the tip evil," said the traveled girl. "Now, last summer, just before I left London, I got cursed awfully. It was like this: I had tipped everybody on the place—the manservants, the maidservants, the slavey, the bootblack. Then just before I got in a cab a man up and threw an old soiled cloth over the wheel to protect my skirts as I got in. Nobody asked him. It didn't protect my skirts, because it was worse than the wheel, so I didn't think it was necessary to tip him.

"I wish you could have seen his face. It scared me. He swore an awful oath. Then he said, 'I honly 'opes the boat goes down wid ye, that's what I 'opes!'

"I was pretty wabbly all the way over, thinking it might, but the boat didn't go down."—New York Press.

Too Soon For Her.

Apropos of those who never enjoy the luxury of a carriage save when the death of some one makes for a free ride to the cemetery a clergyman told of a little girl standing at Fifth avenue and Thirtieth street, New York. She was a ragged little thing, and she was watching the carriages rolling past with the most wistful blue eyes.

"Well, little one," he said, "would you like to own one of those carriages?"

The blue eyes turned up, and there were tears in their corners.

"I never rode in a kerridge," she said softly. "Me little brudder died afore I was born."

The Midnight Sun.

The midnight sun is not visible south of the polar circle. It is above the horizon throughout the twenty-four hours at Bodo from June 3 to July 7, at Tromso from the 19th of May to the 22d of July and at the North cape from the 12th of May to the 29th of July. There are corresponding periods during December, January and November when the sun is not seen, but the darkness of the winter is by no means so great as might be imagined. The whiteness of the snow and the glimmer of the northern lights make a sort of perpetual twilight.

The Makings In Church.

"I never knew," said the nervous man, "what an inveterate smoker I am until recently in church, my first visit for a long while, I found myself mechanically rolling a cigarette. In fact, I had it rolled and was reaching for a match when I suddenly came to. Suppose I hadn't waked up? Rather awful, what?"—New York Press.

One of Our Pet Phrases.

"Did any of the inhabitants escape with his life?" inquired the man who wants harrowing details.

"I didn't stop to ascertain," answered the man who is harrowingly exact. "It struck me that if anybody escaped without his life there wasn't much use in his escaping anyhow."—Washington Star.

A Frank Answer.

"Habitual thirst, your honor."

ARTISTIC JAPAN.

Rules of Harmony Prevail In Even the Humblest Homes.

By far the greatest charm of Japan and her people lies not only in the fact that the artists know the secret of the most wonderful carvings, castings, wood and metal work, silken brocades and tapestries, exquisite cloisonnes and porcelains, things for the fortunate few, but also in the further and more important fact that the daily life of the poor is surrounded, permeated, interfused by taste and refinement. Even the workmen in their gardens and homes are daily using tasteful domestic implements which are the outgrowth of the thought and needs of the people.

The designs and proportions of the humblest houses, exteriors and interiors, are settled for all time by certain rules of harmony; the dress of the peasant is not left to possible hideous individual caprice, but follows established canons of color, cut and usage; the garden, however small, the fence or paling that walls it in, the roof over the well, over the gate, the great lantern that hangs by the door, the bucket in which water is fetched and the bamboo dipper from which it is poured, the bronze brazier for coals, the tea service—all these and a thousand more details of daily life are arranged according to a pattern which may be very old, but which, as a result, adds immeasurably to the satisfaction of life.

And yet Japanese craftsmen, while holding hard by tradition, have not failed to add to their work the subtle touch of personality. In the motifs of their delicately impressionistic and symbolical designs is constantly seen their reverence for the early masters, and as constantly is perceived the individual variation which prevents each piece of work from having a duplicate.—M. L. Wakeman Curtis in Craftsman.

HE FIXED THE DEED.

A Judge Who Had Small Regard For Legal Quibbles.

Theophilus Harrington, a Vermont judge in the early part of the last century, was a man who loved the right and cared little for mere legal quibbling. "If justice controls your verdict," he would often say to the jury, "you will not miss the general principles of the law."

At one trial when the possession of a farm was in question the defendant offered a deed of the premises, to which the plaintiff's lawyer, Daniel Chipman, objected because it had no seal.

"But your client sold the land, was paid for it and signed the deed, did he not?" asked the judge.

"That makes no difference," said Chipman. "The deed has no seal and cannot be admitted in evidence."

"Is there anything else the matter with the deed?" asked the judge.

"I don't know that there is."

"Mr. Clerk," said the judge, "give me a wafer and a three cornered piece of paper."

The clerk obeyed, and the judge deliberately made and affixed the seal.

"There, Brother Chipman," said he, "the deed is all right now. It may be put in evidence. A man is not going to be cheated out of his farm in this court when there is a whole box of wafers on the clerk's desk."

"The court will give me an exception?" pleaded the counsel.

"The court will do no such thing," answered the judge, and he kept his word.—Exchange.

British Election Tactics.

British electioneering tactics have changed. Electors are no longer kidnaped and forced to lose the poll. The minor details of the campaign, however, remain the same. Mr. Labouchere, for instance, in his fight for Windsor in the seventies canvassed six hours each day for a month, kissed babies, complimented mothers and persuaded fathers just as he would today. But when the final survey was made his supporters found that everything depended on half a dozen voters. And here stepped in the diplomat. One Tory who went to fish in a punt was kept in the middle of the river until his vote was useless. Another aged and decrepit Tory was kept in the house by cabs being put to run at him whenever he tried to issue from his door. The Liberals won, but the Tories petitioned successfully.

No Sentiment.

At a literary and scientific gathering a learned Greek scholar got into conversation with one of the leading mathematicians of the day and apparently found a ready listener. He gave again and again exquisite lines from Homer from the original, and the sonorous words rolled off his tongue in fine style. After awhile, noticing that his audience, the man of figures, made no remark, he paused and said in a questioning tone of wonder:

"Of course you think those lines masterly, do you not?"

"Certainly," said the mathematician, "but what do they prove?"

Why an Alias?

One afternoon, when the Duke of Edinburgh and Sir Arthur Sullivan, having finished a duet, were sitting down to a homely "dish of tea" provided by Mrs. Sullivan, the composer's mother, it suddenly occurred to her to start the subject of family names and titles, which puzzled the good lady considerably.

"Sir," she said, "your family name is Guelph."

"My dear mother," began Arthur.

"But it is, isn't it?" she persisted.

"Certainly," replied the duke, much amused. "What's the matter with it, Mrs. Sullivan?"

"Oh, nothing," returned the excellent old lady musingly. "Only I can't understand why you don't call yourself by your proper name."

Arthur wanted to explain to her, but the duke would not allow him to.

"There's nothing to be ashamed of in the name of Guelph, Mrs. Sullivan," he said gravely.

"That's exactly what I say," persisted Arthur's mother; "nothing whatever as far as I know, and, that being so, why you should not call yourself by it I can't understand."—F. C. Burnand's "Records and Reminiscences."

A Great Relief.

An old organ blower lay on his deathbed. He was a good old fellow, and everybody liked him. He had always been ready to do anything and everything connected with the church without complaining, but had evidently had his own troubles which he had kept locked in his breast.

The curate was with the old man, soothing and comforting him as best he could.

"Would you mind, sir," said the sick man, "asking the organist to play the dead march over me? Lor', but I just love that dead march!"

"Certainly, with pleasure, Mr. Jones," replied the curate.

"Thank'ee, sir; none o' that there tweedledum Beethoven, you know, but Handel's."

"I can promise that much, my good man," said the curate.

The old man lay placidly for awhile and then exclaimed with fervor, "How thankful I am that I shan't have to blow for him when he plays the loud part at the end!"

The Englishman In a Groove.

In England nine-tenths of the lads of the middle classes look forward to nothing more than a seat at an office desk with a certain number of shillings a week for a certain number of years. To attempt to do anything else would be to run the risk of social ostracism. A young man may loaf respectably on his family, but he must on no account start a business if it involves selling anything or producing anything with his hands. That would be bad form. It would be getting outside the groove. Thus for the great mass of the people England holds no romance. The lad who thinks he could do something is discouraged. Everything is so cut and dried. Every class distinction is so definitely marked. The whole weight of public opinion is against the smallest divergence from the ordinary rule.—Manchester (England) Mail.

Next Door to It.

An acquaintance of the late Josh Billings was one day talking with him about the remarkable increase of imitations and substitutes for original articles, as "oleomargarine" for "butter," "celluloid" for "ivory," and so forth, "and," said he, "many of the substitutes go ahead of the real thing. I guess in time there will be a substitute for everything, though I don't know about 'wisdom.'"

"No;" replied the humorist, "up to the present time at least there is no really good substitute for wisdom. But silence is the best that has so far been discovered."

No Criterion.

Once during the progress of a certain case Sir Charles Darling remonstrated with a barrister for the way in which he was arguing a point.

"You will pardon me, my lord," said the latter, "but perhaps I may remind you that you argued a case in a similar way yourself when you were at the bar."

"Yes, I admit it," replied his lordship, with a quiet smile, "but that was the fault of the judge who allowed it."—London Tit-Bits.

Killed by Fear.

Frederick I. of Prussia was killed by fear. His wife was [illegible], and one day she escaped from her keeper and, dabbing her clothes with blood, rushed upon her husband while he was dozing in his chair. King Frederick imagined her to be the "white lady" whose ghost was believed to invariably appear whenever the death of a member of the royal family was to occur, and he was thrown into a fever and died in six weeks.

Hedgehogs and Eggs.

Some years ago, not being able to account for the disappearance of eggs, a wire cage trap was set in a fowl run. After a little time this was occupied—not by a rat, but a fine hedgehog filled to its utmost capacity the trap. It was reset, to be filled in a few days by Mrs. Hedgehog. No more eggs were missed.—London Times.

Not Funny For the Nephew.

"A little change of heir," remarked the old man as he altered his will, cutting off his nephew in favor of a distant relative.

Enthusiasm gives life to what is invisible and interest to what has no immediate action on our comfort in this world.—Mme. de Stael.

Danderine

Grows Hair and we can

PROVE IT!

DANDERINE is to the hair what fresh showers of rain and sunshine are to vegetation. It goes right to the roots, invigorates and strengthens them. Its exhilarating, stimulating and life-producing properties cause the hair to grow abundantly long, strong and beautiful. It at once imparts a sparkling brilliancy and velvety softness to the hair, and a few weeks' use will cause new hair to sprout all over the scalp. Use it every day for a short time, after which two or three times a week will be sufficient to complete whatever growth you desire.

A lady from St. Paul writes in substance, as follows:
"When I began using Danderine my hair would not come to my shoulders and now it is away below my hips.

Another from Newark, N. J.
"I have been using Danderine regularly. When I first started to use it I had very little hair, now I have the most beautiful long and thick hair anyone would want to have."

We Use 3,000,000 Matches a Minute.

An expert in the match industry estimates last year's output of matches at 1,500,000,000,000—fifteen hundred billions. This provided something like 3,000,000 matches a minute for the use of the civilized world, says the New York World. Plenty of people now living remember when the sulphur match in its present form was unknown. And the old flint has not yet gone entirely out of use. In fact, it has had a recent revival of practical usefulness and is on sale now as a substitute for matches perhaps more extensively than at any time in the last half century. In neat little leather cases, with a pocket for the very inflammable "kindling," fire flints and steel are offered at most places where hunting outfits are for sale. They are so well made that no special skill is required in their use, and a fire is produced quite as quickly as with a match.

Among the Eskimos the possession of a flint is the sure mark of wealth, or was until fur traders from the South began bringing matches into the Arctic Circle and made it possible for a man to attain the distinction of having a fire starter by the simple exchange of a few furs for a box of safeties.

MacMahon and Grevy.

In Paris in the revolution of 1830 a law student was soundly kicked by one of the king's officers for tearing down a copy of the ordinances placarded on the wall. The officer was armed, the student was not, so the latter ran away. Nearly a half century later, in 1879, the officer called upon the student to bid him goodby, having just resigned the presidency of the French republic on account of a radical difference with the majority of the national assembly on questions of state policy. He combined with his adieus also a graceful word of congratulation on the student's election to succeed him in the presidential chair. The student was Jules Grevy; the officer was Patrice de MacMahon, who died ripe in years and honors.

The Falkland Islands.

The Falkland islands are among the least known and most out of the way corners of the widely scattered British empire. They form a sort of British suburb of the south pole, some 500 miles from the antarctic end of America, Cape Horn. A former governor of the Falkland islands, the late Sir William Robinson, used to say that he would have committed suicide while there if he could have found a tree tall enough to hang himself on.—London Standard.

Very Unconventional.

"Is this proposal the result of a bet or a joke or a dare?" asked the girl.

"No; I ask you to marry me because I love you."

"It is unusual; but, after all, the unusual is the proper caper nowadays. I accept you, Algernon."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Mrs. Jawback—John, you have a beautiful stenographer!

Mr. Jawback—Nonsense, dear! What makes you think—

Mrs. Jawback—John, this letter you dictated to her is full of mispelled words!—Cleveland Leader.

Ode to a Wife.

My roommate is a worthless shirk
Who never does a stroke of work.
He never seems to have a cent,
And when he has it's quickly spent.

And yet, because he's kind and dear,
I do his lessons, buy his beer
And let him lead a social life.
You see, he makes a model wife.
—Yale Record.

Going the Wrong Way.

A self conscious and egotistical young clergyman was called to a church in a small town in upper New York. After his first service the youthful minister asked one of the deacons, a big hearted but extremely plain spoken old fellow, what he thought of "this morning's effort."

The deacon was silent a few moments before replying. Finally he said:

"Well, I'll put it to ye in a kind of parable. It reminded me of Tom Dorgan's fust deer hunt, when he was green. He follered the deer's tracks all right, but he follered 'em all day in the wrong direction."

Love and a Shining Mark.

Percy—I came to ask you for the hand of your daughter.

Goldrox—Which one?

"Why, Elsie!"

"Oh, she's in school yet! She wouldn't think of such a thing."

"Well, Ethel, then."

"Oh, Ethel is too young!"

"Then give me Mary in marriage. She's old enough."

"Oh, yes; Mary is old enough to know better!"—Yonkers Statesman.

Practical View.

"So you believe in marrying for love?" asked the innocent maid.

"Yes, to a certain extent," replied the fair widow, "but marrying for love without a side issue of bread and butter is like sipping the froth from a glass of soda water."—Chicago News.

The Day of Re-covering Old Umbrellas is Past

Never again will you be compelled to wait three or four days to have your old umbrella frame re-covered by an inefficient workman, and then possibly have a rusted rib break, and ruin your new cover.

Hull Brothers Umbrella Co. have announced through Saturday Evening Post and Woman's Home Companion that they will convert old umbrella handles into Hull handles with the detachable feature

FREE

They are enabling us to supply you with a new Hull base, (rod, rib and cover)—all at the mere price of re-covering your old umbrella.

They can do this because the frame of the average umbrella only costs 12½c, and because they figure every person who once uses the Hull Umbrella, will forever discard their old umbrella and they will be amply repaid for their time, trouble and expense.

If you have an old umbrella in your home that needs re-covering, bring it to our store and in two or three days, we hand you the new style Hull with detachable and interchangeable handle.

When you have exchanged your old umbrella for this new style, the Hull umbrella, you will begin to enjoy uses and advantages which no other umbrella has ever given you before.

In fact, the Hull is going to make you discard the old umbrella for all time, so take advantage of this offer and bring your old umbrella to our store immediately.
